CPYRIGHT Red Subversion Is Greatest Menace

ALLEN W. DULLES, FORMER CHIEF of the Central Intelligence Agency, is a thoughtful realist who probably knows more about international political intrigue than anyone else. When he speaks of political positions and military threats, his words should be noted carefully.

Therefore, it is of far more than passing interest that Dulles last week pinpointed the greatest menace facing the world today. This greatest menace, he said, is a Communist takeover through subversion "in a war of the minds."

The former CIA boss said that the United States is so superior militarily to the Russians that Soviet Premier Khrushchev fears to get engaged in an all-out war and instead has decided on a plan of insidious conquest through the Communist Party's worldwide machinery to subvert governments.

"If we tolerate a subverted Communist Cuba at our doorstep," Dulles said, "that has given Khrushchev a key to try it out on a worldwide basis."

In the light of Dulles' warning, Vermonters may become increasingly concerned over a recent report by Free Press Columnist Victor Riesel. The report noted that the Communist Party, U.S.A., is vastly broadening its base of activities in this country.

The deadly Communist threat is internal as well as external, and free men neglect that fact at their peril.
